How the New Code of Local Authorities shapes the Region's Responsibilities

Regional and local governance authorities play a significant role in the everyday lives of citizens and businesses, since they absorb the greatest part of Business-to-Government and Citizen-to-Government transactions. The responsibilities of the Greek local and regional authorities are a heavily discussed issue. In the recent past, a series of reforms have been implemented, namely "Kapodistrias", "Kallikratis" and "Kleisthenis". Despite these changes, there are still a number of legal constraints regarding a series of responsibilities, e.g. education, social care, funding and monitoring of local and regional authorities. Given the acceleration of the authorities' digital transformation due to the pandemic, the need for interventions that will solve the existing dysfunctions regarding the responsibilities of the Greek local and regional authorities is prominent.

The difficult road to cohesion: Correcting imbalances among and within European regions

The EU has provided European Regions with important funding for a wide range of fundamental infrastructure projects, addressing to a great extent the economic and development problems brought about by lack of basic equipment and structures. It is now imperative that we ensure imbalances among and within regions are corrected and socioeconomic cohesion is strengthened. Addressing interregional divergences is key for the smooth development of European integration and for making European region Greener, smarter, more inclusive and competitive at the global level.

Digital Transformation in Local Government

Local governments have the potential to be more agile, innovative as well as responsive to the needs of their citizens. The major challenge is to make it work for the best, achieving also the right balance among different levels of competence. The digital transformation of Greek municipalities has been in the epicenter of public discussion in the past decade, showing signs of acceleration due to the Covid-19 pandemic. How do Greek municipalities rank when it comes to offering digital services? What kind of obstacles and opportunities do the local governments have in order to reach a satisfying level of digitization?

European Cities supporting Ukraine

The invasion of Russia to Ukraine has led to a series of disastrous effects, such as the destruction of critical infrastructure, a high number of fatalities, the disruption of the country's and EU's economy, as well as the displacement of more than 4 million Ukrainians. Should the EU authorities specify and take into consideration the effects of the war on the Ukrainian regions and cities, so that they can design a recovery plan for Ukraine? Should they also consider how some EU regions are affected by the war, especially those who receive the biggest influx of refugees? What will be the consequences of the sanctions imposed on Russia on the EU regional economies and how should EU tackle them?

Beyond the present: Investing in Infrastructures for Change

Targeted infrastructure investments are crucial for building economic and environmental sustainability for the next decades. Tomorrow's infrastructure investments should be designed on a forward-looking basis, not only addressing present needs, but also guaranteeing system-wide resilience to potential future crises. Furthermore, sustainable infrastructures are key to the success of the evolving aims of green transition and climate neutrality commitments. Which investments are necessary to make so that we achieve the green mobility policy goal? Can infrastructures turn climate neutral in the short term?

The Road to Smart Cities: Reinventing Urban Areas

Cities' shifting demographics along with the scale and speed of urban growth pose grand challenges to urban sustainability, the environment and our prosperity. Intelligent technologies and systems have a substantial unrealized potential to improve the urban quality of life, revolutionize our cities and transform urban environments towards more secure, efficient and green infrastructures, public services and utilities. How can we meet the opportunities arising from this transformation and secure our well-being in the post-pandemic world?

Intelligent Cities

Modernizing the operation of local and regional authorities is a necessity. "Smart Cities" ensure digital benefits for citizens via investing on internet and technology infrastructure. However, the "next big step" is to achieve the combination of smart systems and big data processing, allowing a transition from smart to "intelligent cities". How can smart and intelligent city actors better work together in order to achieve the aforementioned transition? What are the constraints in the case of Greek municipalities and the Greek enterprises offering smart city solutions?

Solid Waste Management Challenges in a Circular Economy Future

Contrary to the “business as usual” model, the model of the circular economy proposes a different method of production. According to this, most of the waste remains in the productive procedure as raw material for other end products or services. Through the circular economy model and the new legislative provisions and the sustainability strategies promoted both nationally and across Europe, states are required to reduce the generated waste and to develop more eco-friendly management and use methods.

Marine Environment Protection & Citizen Science

The workshop intends to cover the topic of marine environment protection and present the "citizen science" concept, defined as the collection and analysis of data relating to the natural world by members of the general public, typically as part of a collaborative project with professional scientists. It is thus interconnected with the environmental citizenship or activism initiatives in favor of the marine environment protection. Volunteers and associations from the area of the gulfs of Corinth and Patras surrounding the Rio-Antirrio Bridge had been pioneering in the past in such projects supported by scientists and companies related to the marine element around Western Greece. This year's Regional Growth Conference is expected to announce the restart of "blue citizenship" in this special region.

How sustainable Blue Economy contributes to EU Climate Neutrality:

Focus on Lessons Learned by Maritime and Coastal Regions Maritime (and coastal) regions are at the forefront of the growing and worsening impacts of climate change. However, they are also major players/actors and enablers for a climate neutral and prosperous Europe/future. In this respect, sustainable blue economy is key to deliver the European Green Deal reach EU climate objectives. The session will revolve around the role of the blue economy and the measures implemented by regional authorities to deliver the ecological and climate transition. It will encompass different areas, such as offshore renewable energy, maritime transport, skills, and coastal resilience showing the importance of an integrated approach.

The Green & Digital Transition for Shipping and Ports: A challenge and an opportunity for Greece

Shipping is a key pillar of the modern national and global economy. Internationally, shipping represents 80% of world trade, while Greek shipping is the first in total fleet capacity worldwide. In the effort to achieve zero carbon dioxide emissions, the reduction of the environmental footprint of shipping is prominent since, according to experts, the contribution of shipping to global carbon dioxide emissions is currently 2.9% and is increasing. The solution that appears is the production and use of new fuels with zero or minimal carbon footprint and this great opportunity stems from the fact that these new fuels can be produced in Greece, using energy from RES produced in our country, through the application of know-how that exists in Greek research and academic institutions.

Foresight of Greek Cities and Regions: A long-term view

Adaptability and resilience are traits indispensable to any government, organization or firm willing to thrive in the post-pandemic world, which is growing more heterogenous, unstable and volatile. Cities and regions cannot escape this reality. The pandemic unveiled our limitations in planning ahead. Cities should now explore potential long-term futures and develop proactive policies to diminish their vulnerability to unforeseen large-scale shocks. In an increasingly complex and unpredictable environment, cities have to develop new tools in order to shape resilient local economies and mechanisms and reposition themselves for future roles at the national and international level.

Digital Skills and Employability

The current workplace increasingly asks for employees with highly digitally skilled knowledge who produce and distribute ideas and information. As such, understanding the factors behind differences in the level of various 21st-century digital skills is of decisive importance. Moreover, the Covid-19 pandemic has presented humanity with a huge challenge to our known infrastructures – education systems, healthcare provision, social support, businesses, and community cohesion. At the same time, we have all been forced to learn new digital skills. New skills to continue learning, teaching, working, running a business, communicating with loved ones, and even discerning what information we can trust. During Digital Skills & Employability session, we'll discuss and present how digital skills and digital tools unlock and amplify the subjects of STE(A)M Education and Digital Social Innovation, how they solve real world problems and add value by boosting citizens' employability at local, national and EU level

Taking Greece's Digital Transformation to the next level

During the past two and a half years, a wide range of the Greek public sector got digitized, making a long-overdue technological upgrade possible. Bureaucracy was reduced, administrative procedures were simplified and digital public services skyrocketed. However, digital transformation of the Greek society and economy is an ongoing process. Greece's digital readiness is to be boosted through the implementation of 450 projects described in the Ministry of Digital Governance's Digital Transformation Bible. Which are the fundamental interventions aiming to take Greece's digital transformation to the next level? What kind of multi-stakeholder cooperation could contribute to more efficiently implementing the government's digital transition strategy?

Greek regions under the prism of SDGs: 2022 SDG Index and Dashboards report

The 2030 Agenda and the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) outline a comprehensive strategy to be implemented by all countries. Valid measurements and data availability are vital in order to turn SDGs into practical problem-solving tools. The National Report on the Implementation of Agenda 2030 states that local and regional authorities in Greece are responsible for the implementation of SDGs, with a big share of policies, services and actions related to SDGs taking place at regional level. However, the regional authorities that implement the above are often unaware of the impact they have on the achievement of SDGs. Aiming to address this challenge, UN SDSN and Data Consultants produced a report that measures the progress of the 13 Greek regions towards achieving the SDGs.

Mediterranean dimension of the EU: Proposals for the future

The Mediterranean basin is not only a historical crossroads of civilizations and culture, but also a continuous source of tension and instability. How can we replace competition and rivalry with increased connectivity and balanced socio-economic development? What is the role of the EU, national and regional authorities in this process and how can the civil society contribute to it? This one-day Forum will explore four game changers that can facilitate the fostering of an area of peace and prosperity with their transformative power. These game changers include both top-down mega policy projects, emanating from the EU and/or national levels of policymaking, as well as bottom-up dynamics, stemming from and involving the civil society. Not only do they stimulate regional growth and cohesion within the EU, but they also build bridges rather than fences with other countries in the Mediterranean in pursuit of cooperative solutions to common problems. From the Recovery and Resilience Fund (RRF) to the European Green Deal, each game changer will be discussed in a separate session with contributions by high level experts from the policy-making community, academia, and civil society.

The Pandemic Footprint and the Protection of the Population

For the last two years, the National Healthcare System has been extensively tested due to the pandemic and the countless losses that it has endured during this time. The pandemic set a new foundation for many areas of the global scientific community and imposed its own terms as a result. It taught us new techniques that provided us with the ability for immediate safeguarding of the Public Health, while also facilitating the upgrade and renewal of our national health units. The pandemic's lessons will become the legacy of the future and the starting point for coordination and planning for any upcoming pandemic. Health "readiness" is now intertwined with our National Health Care System, and we owe this to our scientific health staff. With our health competence we managed to get our lives back...

Well-Being: Improving Lives by Improving Regions

Well-being is integrally linked to the place one lives. Ensuring lives of quality depends on a variety of factors, ranging from income to the environment of the community one lives and interacts. Improving people's life is about improving the place they live in and develop. Hence, well-being requires building better and most sustainable societies. Designing targeted public policies to upgrade regions, especially those who in different sectors lag behind is essential to respond to people's needs and meet their expectations.

Challenges for Civil Protection and disaster risk reduction in Western Greece

Our cities and communities are facing increasing risks related to natural hazards and the impacts of the climate crisis. In Western Greece natural disasters have caused heavy losses of human lives and destruction. In this panel local government representatives and experts discuss the need for integrated disaster risk planning and systematic efforts for the reconstruction and recovery of areas affected by disasters. Improving the responsiveness and effectiveness of the disaster risk management system at all levels of action is an important concern for local governments. A major opportunity in the current period exists in the reform of the national system for civil protection and the setting up of special funding programs with the aim to improve capacities and capabilities to manage disaster risks at local level.

Nature-based solution for regional and national sustainable development

Pursuing job creation, growth, and competitiveness while tackling the global environmental crisis, is a long-standing economic and societal challenge and a top priority for the European Commission. Any region's economic competitiveness and security—in the long run—depends directly on sustainable use of natural resources. The EU intends to invest substantially in nature-based solutions to tackle the socio-economic challenges we face in the 21st century. Large-scale pilots and demonstration projects of tangible nature-based solutions should maintain or increase production of well-being and welfare at lower costs and offer potential for job-rich innovation. How could these concepts be implemented at national and regional level? Successful case study examples and potential applications will be presented

Households' Food Waste Problem in Greece: Key Findings of a nationwide Research

Food waste (FW) is one of the most serious problems of modern societies and at the same time one of the greatest challenges of our time. It is now common knowledge that FW is linked to food insecurity and climate change. Published scientific findings and international literature highlight that FW harms the society, the environment and the economy. Reducing food loss and waste (FLW) to 50% by 2030, across the food supply chain, is a key goal for Agenda 2030 as presented in SDG 12. The workshop aims to present the key findings of a nationwide research regarding household food waste that took place in Greece at 2022

Artificial Intelligence (AI) in Marketing

Following the internet revolution, retail and promotion, daily data generation led to a point where marketers could not further process, using the traditional statistical ways, the new demands of vast data volume. The use of big data analytics emerged, and the rise of AI came along with predictive analytics including machine learning and data mining solutions. Artificial Intelligence (AI) has both evolved and affected the way marketing is implemented. AI is proven to be a sophisticated way of analyzing and processing data as well as decision making. The privilege of its use is considered an asset to the business executives who understand its potential. Considering AI as a tool, it may provide massive data processing and prediction accuracy. Marketers have been in pursuit of customer satisfaction using AI tools to read web metrics and optimize reach and conversions strategies. Since consumer behavior varies, brands struggle to classify customer satisfaction factors. Thus, they invest time and money to highlight their products or services potentials, better define the market share, and classify customers' needs. Machine learning, natural language processing, expert systems, voice, vision, planning, and robotics are the main AI branches that companies use to stay ahead of the competition. Business objectives aim to attract new customers, predict consumer behavior, along with the capability to personalize and predict demand using "smart" systems which allow them to increase sales, mitigate the decision-making risk and increase customer satisfaction, customer loyalty, and sales predictions. This session discusses the stages of AI contribution to marketing providing solid case studies of AI appliances.

EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES - EDU ACTS

In cooperation with the University of Patras and the University of Peloponnese*

Convinced that youth is the most dynamic part of our society the Regional Growth Conference enables dozens of young people to take part in the RGC experience by participating in the largest event on Regional Development.

For this year's annual conference, the RGC 2022, which will take place from June 9th-11th in Patras at the Conference and Cultural Centre of the University of Patras, will collaborate with the University of Patras and the University of Peloponnese, and will be offering free educational activities aimed at undergraduate and postgraduate students.

More specifically, every year the RGC, together with the University of Patras, organizes a four-day Summer Workshop. The topic of this year's Workshop is "Regional Governance: Policies for Nature Conservation, Sustainability and Resilience", and it has been designed to offer an interdisciplinary approach to the above topic through lectures, presentations, group works and on-site visits in relative local business and organizations in order to offer to the students combined theoretical and empirical knowledge.

Furthermore, for its 3rd consecutive year of co-operation with the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering of the University of the Peloponnese, the RGC will be organizing a Summer School, which will take an in depth look at "Intelligent Cities: Technologies and Services of Smart Information Systems". The first days of the 6-day long Summer School will be held online, while from 9th to 11th of June, it will be hosted at Achaia Clauss, in parallel with the Conference.

Apart from participating in educational activities, at the RGC 2022 students have the opportunity to meet important personalities from Greece and abroad, and attend keynote speeches, sessions and interviews.

RGC 2022 continues to innovate, embracing new trends in science and collaborating with the country's universities. Over the three days of the Conference, the participating students will have the opportunity to deepen their knowledge on various scientific fields and draw on the know-how of the participating professors and researchers from the Universities of Patras and the Peloponnese.
